Ummmm so my school is next to a police station. They were training the dogs and the doors to my school were open so parents could come in. So in the middle of my big scene The Last Midnight with smoke machines and everything the dogs ran into the school and started dancing around me. It was kind of cute but the parents got rally mad

Do you know if the police let them? I doubt they would allow a bunch of half-trained dogs loose in an unfamiliar environment, and something like that can set them months back in training the dogs, which means a lot of money wasted on the program. I wouldn't be surprised if those dogs flunk out :(

That's sad. Most of the police forces here have some sort of program for their "dropouts" so they can go to a home that can handle them. There was even a thing recently where a police got in trouble for dumping his retired K9 in the pound. They aren't really suited for every family.

I don't really have context for what he said to you, so i can't fully answer that question. I've been present for his appearances in the past, and although he can be annoying at times, he's relatively harmless. It's the people that feed into his outrage culture that blow things out of proportion. most of the things he says are specifically geared to get a rise out of people, and it works the majority of the time. That 100% does not excuse the things he's done, but he's a person, just like you or I. Stooping to his level and sending that kind of hate back to him isn't the way to go. By all means, you can stand up for yourself or other people, but you don't have to be nasty about it and feed into it.

I guess I'm not 100% on anyone's side. I dislike being concrete about those things.
